Diane Kenyon joined the University of Calgary as vice-president (University Relations) on March 28, 2011.

Diane is from Ryerson University where she held the position of assistant vice-president, marketing and communications. During her six years at Ryerson, Diane was a key member of the senior team guiding the university through a transformative period of growth and success. Under her leadership, Ryerson’s profile and reputation was significantly enhanced and connections strengthened with alumni, media, internal and external stakeholders, and municipal, provincial and federal governments.

Prior to joining Ryerson, she spent 14 years with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in a variety of senior marketing, communications and strategy roles. As executive director, communications for CBC’s English Services, she led integrated marketing and communications strategy for both the national networks and local stations. She travelled to all regions of Canada and oversaw local CBC communications teams across the country, including in Alberta.

Diane has a track record of building effective and respected teams in large, complex organizations, and launching innovative initiatives that support institutional goals. She plays an integral role in enhancing the University of Calgary’s profile and reputation as we share our stories with Calgary, Alberta, Canada and the world.
