

Krystal Marlier, MA student, BA, BSc

University of Calgary

Krystal is currently a MA student in Classics at the University of Calgary. Holding a BA in Classics and a BSc in Psychology, Krystal has developed a passion for interdisciplinary approaches to ancient and modern conceptualizations of mental disorders. Before commencing her graduate studies, she worked as a research assistant for the Cumming School of Medicine in Calgary. She was part of a team researching in psychosocial outcomes and neurodevelopment in pregnant women. Despite this informative work, she considers research in the ancient world and its connection to the modern to be her most compelling work to date.
