

Emily Macphail is currently a second-year medical student at the University of Calgary where she also previously earned a Bachelor's of Health Sciences honours degree in biomedical science. She began her exploration into medical and healthcare humanities during her first degree, and also has a strong interest in medical student wellness and mental health. She is heavily involved in extracurricular activities within and outside of the university, including as co-president of the medical school's Peer Listening and Wellness Group and as Western Regional Representative for the Canadian Federation of Medical Students. Her short story was inspired by a studentship-supported immersive educational experience at the Hazelden Betty Ford Foundation.
